ach time I sit to write this welcome, we enjoy another milestone - so before my message takes up the entire newsletter, I'm sending this out today.

If your podcast, book or magazine targets rural, regional and remote Australian listeners and readers, then we have the room for you, with our latest to open in The Homestead Hub being Podcasts and Publications.

Another exciting website addition is our Positions Vacant page; a place for listed Members to advertise available positions, and for job seekers to find work opportunities, Australia wide.

Our first social event for The Homestead Hub was a gathering at the Broome races in June. Members and guests from across the country came together, not only to meet, network and punt at one of the most picturesque racetracks in Australia, but to go home with what has been hailed one of the best gift bags ever - filled with goodies from fellow Members of The Homestead Hub.

Honouring our commitment to Beyond Blue, several businesses listed with The Homestead Hub have been hosting Big Blue Table events across the country during October, and we couldn't be more proud.

In this Bush Telegraph we proudly profile one of our Top of the Range Members, Air Kimberley - who in addition to tourism, provides essential services, supplying remote communities and outback stations across Western Australia and the Northern Territory.

FEATURE SUPPLIER PROFILE AIR KIMBERLEY

For unforgettable scenic adventure flights exploring Australia's remote Northwest

'Connecting Australia's Northwest through our diverse charter and tourism operations is essential in supporting community. With our impeccable customer service, our clients are always guaranteed safe, efficient, and professional air services,' says Owner, Ash Munn.

Ash grew up in Sale, rural Victoria, close to the East Sale RAAF base. From an early age he dreamt of becoming a pilot. 'I started my pilot's licence when I was fifteen and did my first solo flight on my sixteenth birthday,' says Ash. Since gaining his licence Ash worked as a pilot as well as in the tourism and hospitality industry gaining key business management skills as an Executive Hotel Manager - but he never imagined owning his own aviation company.

Based in Broome, Air Kimberley first took to the skies back in 1992 as King Leopold Air, a small charter company based on a pastoral station close to its namesake – the spectacular King Leopold Ranges. Throughout the years, as the company expanded, King Leopold Air moved its operational base to Broome, the Western gateway to the Kimberley and the pearling capital of Australia.

In early 2018, Ash and his partner Jensen purchased the company. Ash and Jensen, both being long-time local aviation and tourism professionals and pilots, took on the business with plans to regenerate, renew and expand its operations. In just a short few years the company grew exponentially and developed into an award-winning and highly reputable tour and transport operator.

In July 2020, the iconic King Leopold Ranges were renamed to the Wunaamin Miliwundi Ranges, honouring the Indigenous custodians of the land shedding the name of the former Belgian ruler responsible for brutal oppression and enslavement of African people. Of course, the company name no longer reflected the values of the business and Air Kimberley was born.

'Operating all year round, our highly experienced pilots are additionally trained as tour guides to provide a comprehensive and informative insight into the stunning

Kimberley landscape. In collaboration with our tour partners, Air Kimberley offers a diverse and unique choice of tour itineraries which include air, land, and sea safari tours with authentic on country experiences visiting many Kimberley destinations, explains Ash.

In addition to Air Kimberley's tourism operations, they provide essential services and supply remote communities and outback stations across Western Australia and the Northern Territory. Their customers include tourists, aerial photographers, special-interest and corporate and government clients.

When asked what his strongest influences and proudest achievements were Ash responded, 'The most influential people in my life have been the people closest to me. My parents have always backed me all the way. Growing up they inspired us to achieve and taught myself and my siblings a strong work ethic - be kind, humble, aim high, work hard and value your relationships.'

'I'm proud of the skills I have learnt and the relationships I have built throughout my professional life – they have all contributed to my success and ability to own and operate Air Kimberley - a reputable and successful company. This has certainly been myself and Jensen's greatest and proudest achievement. One thing most people don't know about me is that I speak fluent French having lived in France for 5 years - I'm passionate about the French language, food and culture?

When asked about the trends and challenges to aviation industry, Ash responded, 'The world is changing so fast. Rising costs in regulation, fuel, maintenance, and aircraft manufacturing is our greatest challenge - Air Kimberley needs to continue to be forward thinking and innovative, with exceptional cost control measures to ensure viability and longevity without compromising safety.'

'Since purchasing the business in 2018 Air Kimberley has seen a continuous increase in spending on air travel for education transportation, health and medical transportation (largely due to the COVID-19 pandemic), mining charter operations, and increased use of air transportation for tourism. The current and future trend is associated with growing technological advancements in the industry and an increasing awareness of aircraft emissions which will have a significant impact on our future operations as we move to a more sustainable way of flying. Demand for air transport will continue to increase over the next five years. I believe the spotlight will be increased discussions and use of sustainable aviation fuel and a push for Aviation companies to promote and encourage eco-friendly operations with a long-term goal of achieving net zero emissions.'

When asked what advice Ash would give someone thinking about a job in aviation, he responded, 'My advice to anyone thinking about a job in aviation would be, don't rush to the airlines like most young pilots do these days. Spend time gaining experience by flying in remote regions of Australia, these will be some of your best flying years. The more you put into aviation, the more you will receive in return. Work hard and always strive to improve, this will give you the opportunity to build a successful career as well as to meet life-long friends and make precious memories along the way.'

Flying with Air Kimberley is an educational journey of discovery. You will explore ancient cultures, beautiful landscapes and stunning natural attractions. With exceptional customer service, great value for money with a few little surprises along the way, flying with Air Kimberley will be an unforgettable experience.
